

The First Sources of Light

Tom Abel, Center for Astrophysics, USA

Abstract Recent years have led to a watershed in scientific insights gained from direct numerical simulations. In particular our understanding of the formation of primordial proto-stars can be modelled has increased dramatically. However, what sets the final mass of the first stars, and their feedback on subsequent structure formation is currently debated intensely.